

Megan Broadley Case Study

Megan decided to take up the free elective module 'Children's University mentoring' in the second year of her degree. As part of her free elective, she has mentored on both the Children in Care Digital Art experience and also the Ambassadors of Hull experience. These experiences have offered Megan a chance to expand her range of experience working with children, giving her the chance to interact with an age group that she had not really worked with previously.

Megan has enjoyed working with the charity and believes it is important that the children Hull Children's University works with get an equal opportunity for a positive future just as much as other children from more affluent areas. Moreover, she would thoroughly recommend it to any other students considering taking the module. She says: 'If it's all new to you, give it a go because it'll be one of the best things you've been involved in. There is no better feeling than coming away from an experience knowing you could have made a huge difference in a child's life!'
